

ALUMNA CITATION

STEPHANIE PACE MARSHALL, Ph.D.

Graduate School

Education is the nutrient vital to the sustenance of our society and the formation of our nation's future. St. Ignatius Loyola long ago realized the effect of education upon the self esteem of the individual and its enormous impact upon society.

In an era where schools and curricula have been scrutinized and found wanting, it is reassuring to know individuals still care enough to commit themselves to cultivating the minds of our youth. Dr. Stephanie Pace Marshall is one such individual. Her desire to improve American education has led her through the educational system, from teaching grade school to serving as a superintendent of schools.

Today, Dr. Marshall is preparing the finest and brightest minds of tomorrow's potential leaders. She is the founding director of the Illinois Mathematics and Science Academy, a three-year residential high school for gifted students located in Aurora, Ill. She also is a member of Loyola's graduate faculty, as well as a private consultant in education.

Her involvement in her profession led her to be named one of the Chicago Tribune's "88 people to watch in 1988."

Stephanie Pace Marshall, your alma mater praises your contributions to education in our society.
